is published by British Movement South East London as time and resources permit. It is available only to members and supporters of British Movement and is not for public sale or distribution. Its sole function is promotion of real National Socialism, and not psychotic hatred of any other particular or specific race or religion. We reserve our hatred for an Occupation Regime and all of its agents who are deliberately intent on destroying White British racial cohesion, identity, culture, history, and tradition.

2 Towards a Morality Redeemed A society without a soul cannot survive long, and a people without a strong moral basis of purpose will perish. The first step in building a new society is restoring our folk with faith in their instincts.

5 Survival in the Age of the "Holocaust" Endless "Holocaust" propaganda is the prime factor behind an undeclared war on our people. It is a war that uses cultural and political attacks rather than military strikes to pull us down and deflect us from who we are, and the stakes could not be any higher for a people besieged with guilt.

10 Toadies' Ploy Backfires The controlled media use psychological trickery in an attempt to keep our people confused, and prevent us from thinking clearly about what is in our own interest, and what is not. They do not always get their own way as these occasional bright spots show.

A Revolution in Thought; an Idea Whose Time Has Come

Towards a Morality Redeemed

We have always been a unique and ingenious folk — a race of thinkers, of creators, of inventors, and developers of new technologies — generally capable of achieving whatever we set our minds to. We might not have always got it right of course, and sometimes we did not give ourselves time to adapt to the progress we had made before even newer innovations came along. The Industrial Revolution, for instance, was a huge shock to our traditional form of society and learning to cope with these changes put tremendous strain on social order itself.

Of course, it had never been a perfect society — and there were still many problems and imperfections to deal with — even so, its most essential feature was largely still intact: secure in its homogeneity. Everyone had the same roots, the same history, the same genes, and the same sensibilities. There was enough genetic similarity that people understood one another and shared the same hopes. Just knowing who they were, and where they had come from, provided enough security for our people to plan for the future with reasonable confidence, and most were all headed in the same direction. Homogeneity was the glue that held society together, and keeping ourselves separate gave us strength.

That all changed enormously amid the chaos in the latter part of the 18th century, however, and people's connection with one another began to change as consequence. The relationships between our people weakened, and in havoc's midst we began to lose the sense of family, identity, and hierarchal order which was imprinted on our genes through thousands of years in development. Tragically, we had become so disoriented and demoralised by the collapse of society, as we knew it, that we were otherwise concerned when the enemies of our people launched their assault.

Egalitarianism, communism, democracy, and feminism fomented unrest and revolution throughout the 19th century, and the old order was soon drowned in blood. In France, the aristocrats and landowners were butchered in response to the bitterness liberals had stirred up among the yeomanry, and the same process was used by Jewish Bolsheviks in Russia soon after. Millions of successful kulaks — farm owners who worked harder than the rabble — were massacred en masse in service of the Jews' desire to "equalise" society, and thereby destroy all traces of the old, hierarchal order.

The liberals and the Jews became even more confident after the Second World War and began to introduce their idea of racial equality alongside their ideas of social equality. The liberals told us that non-Whites are just as good as we are — perhaps better in some cases — and therefore must become our equals. The Jews were telling us much the same thing of course, although control of the mass media was a more effective tool for persuading sceptical Whites that "Diversity is better!" and "We're all equal!" blah, blah, blah.

In fact, there has been no more pernicious and unprecedented degree of influence upon the manners and morals of White Europeans over the past fifty-years than that of the controlled media. Children born in the 1960s were reared by television, it was their baby-sitter and teacher, and it taught them that their ancestors were exploiters, imperialists, and enslavers of nations: that White people are a particularly obnoxious and self-righteous people, a grasping and hateful bunch of bigots who ruthlessly colonised the non-White world.

Slowly but surely, the controlled media were beginning to inculcate our people with a sense of guilt for being White, and gradually trained them to despise their own traditions and folkways. At first this was done subtly — by making Whites feel guilty for being better off than non-Whites, for being more successful, more creative, and more civilised than the non-White world — and once they had gained the upper hand our enemies became bolder and more arrogant. A new 'morality' was soon being taught in place of the centuries old common morality of our ancestors; usurped by the ethics of the Levant, towards a morality of hedonism.

And now we have a substantially different type of society to before, and an increasingly dysgenic civilisation as a whole. We are fast becoming a race without a proper sense of direction, lacking both focus and the will to resist such destructive propaganda.

That obviously suits other people as well — not just the liberals, the Jews, and the controlled media. The leaders of our churches — who traditionally were the guardians of morality — have long sold out to the corrupters of our people and, almost to a man, actively collaborated alongside our enemies towards a multiracial world and a mongrelised future.

Those who tell us that we can have morality at the same time as the sort of "diversity" our enemies are pushing just don't know what they are talking about. In fact, the escalating chaos that "diversity" has wrought upon society today is a natural consequence of the gradual drift away from a once mainly homogenous society instead.

Incredulously, there are still some people who believe that things have never been better, and try to convince everyone else that more equality and less order are better. We certainly have more equality and less order than ever before; that is sadly true, but is it better for us? Of course it is not. We certainly have more diversity and less homogeneity than ever before — so are they also good for us? Of course they are not, and nor are its advocates.

There is portion of a letter from one such cheerleader later in this issue; a thoughtful man in most sense, but whose compassion is utterly misguided and absolutely reeks with the stench of a misplaced morality. Fundamentally, his "logic" — if taken to its rational conclusion — is precisely why our society has become less healthy than ever, both spiritually and physically. It is a damaged morality becoming ever more prevalent, and it is essentially root cause of the mess we find ourselves in today.

Notice

Due to unforeseen circumstances - and many unwelcome distractions - there has been horrendous delay between issues for which we can only apologise. Subscribers are assured however, that all issues for which they have paid will be received and the scheduled dates for future publication has resumed.

One consequence of the enforced 'down-time' resulted in most of the original articles being scrapped for temporal reasons, which subsequently meant the rapid compilation of their replacements; thus, adding to the delay even further.

If any benefit can be found from our period of absence, however, it is that much of the main features for Number 10 were drafted during that time.

And if you have enjoyed previous issues of A New Awakening then please keep supporting our work; because, to quote the words of an old song:

You ain't seen nothing yet.

And for us to correct that way of thinking is a big job, a really big job in fact; but it must be done. And it can be done.

We know that a society without a soul, and without a strong moral basis, cannot survive long; and we can see that present society is tearing itself apart day by day. But it is not enough to sit around waiting for a cleansing fire to do the job for us. We must get off the sidelines and onto the field ourselves to ensure there will be something left after the fire has done its cleansing; where we still have enough in order to build a new society and we, all of us, have a responsibility to do whatever is necessary to guarantee this.

Of course, this is more than just a really big job; it is a monumental task, in fact — but it is one which can still be done. First, we must understand why we have this problem of moral decay, of moral breakdown; and we must begin to adopt an occupation ethic necessary in planning, in preparing, and in building a new society. If we are to survive in enemy occupied territory in the meantime our ethics must not just be a passive morality which keeps us from doing what is wrong, even if we may itch to do it: our morality must become an active one which leads us only, but always, to do right.

For one thing, there are a million John and Jane Everyday's out there who generally agree with us, but haven't yet reached any significant conclusion what they can do to stop the rot. No longer can they keep on pretending that everything is fine however, because the depravity seen in their own neighbourhoods disgusts them; and despite what the controlled media is telling them, their instinct tells them it's only going to get worse if allowed to continue.

If we are to have more than an uninformed and instinctive reaction to what the controlled media are doing however, then we must have an informed and organised media of our own. Our media must not only be capable of provoking an instinctive response from White Europeans, it must also give them understanding. Our message must not only be a rejection of the new 'morality' imposed, it must also be capable of giving our people hope.

Our monthly podcast Under the Sunwheel and Broadsword magazine are but a small part towards that end, and we must continue building other media until we reach the point where we are able to communicate with all of our people.

This involves much more than just helping to inform them about what is going on the world, but also help make them understand that their instinct to reject the 'morality' of the Levant is not only healthy, it is essential for their survival.

We must help them to have faith in their instincts again, and begin to restore the knowledge of our ancestors' traditions which the controlled media have robbed of them. Once we have done that, we must then be able to return self-confidence within our race, and thereby give back their sense of purpose in life.

Eventually, we must be able to bring our people to the point where they are no longer just disgusted by what our enemies are doing, but also determined to finally put an end to it.

Then, and only then, we must be able to instil within them the single-mindedness to ruthlessly weed our enemies out of the government and the controlled media, and make it impossible for their kind to exert their evil influence on our society and on our children ever again.

And it can be done. It must be done.

Racial idealism can only serve as the incentive for building our movement, for carrying on our struggle, when it has filled and transformed our lives, when it has excluded every other feeling and consideration and determines our every thought and action.

It must possess us, it must drive us; it must allow us no rest and no peace.

Melonie Doesn't Like Us!

And her bosses like us even less. It shouldn't take readers too long to work out why Parker desperately wants her pound of flesh because a cursory glance at this self-aggrandising illustration says everything you need to know.

Actually, the Wicked Witch of Silicon Valley was already using every sinew of energy to stifle dissent wherever she could find it while still juggling with her first training bra. That made it easy for Ugly Spice to make short shrift of her ascendancy at Google, since becoming Director of Diversity, Equity & Inclusion in April last year. Now she carries enough clout in boardrooms across California to get her bosses to do whatever she wants.

In fact, before her Gucci loafers had chance to air that first day, the Ice Queen began removing anything, and everything she considered "hate-speech" from Google-owned YouTube: And British Movement were one of the first to fall prey, with every episode of our Under the Sunwheel podcast deleted from time.

Well, that's what Parker and her lackeys thought anyway. Well, tough luck, Mel; book-burners don't always get their own way. After stripping every broadcast from YouTube, British Movement was back on the airwaves almost immediately via the peer-friendly BitChute channel bringing new hope and understanding to White people worldwide.

Each monthly three-hour programme explains what the news really means for you, and why the controlled media deliberately keep it hidden. It will also help you understand why Melonie and her bosses do not want you, or anyone else to know what it means....

because they also understand what a fully awakened citizenry will mean for them!

And if you are ready to help British Movement

We could literally double our outreach overnight. There are no government grants to fund our work at Under The Sunwheel, and there are no professional think-tanks helping to publish our magazines. We depend solely on the generosity of concerned racial patriots like you.

And when our people are desperately in need of facts more than ever, and are greatly in need of an organisation that can provide alternatives to the controlled media, it is British Movement who have accepted that task.

*But we urgently need your generous help to continue these efforts, and thereby ensure the corrupters of our people get their comeuppance in the process. If you are prepared to help us, then please do so. Not only will you be helping us provide new and valuable information to other thoughtful White people, you will also be helping us to make sure the book-burners get what they deserve....

Survival in the Age of the "Holocaust"

This article was originally published by The Oak on the 50th anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz in January 1995. It is worth reprinting here as the corrupters of our people now celebrate 75 years of the triumph of barbarism over civilisation, of degeneracy over nobility, of darkness over light.

Finding out the exact truth of what happened during the Second World War has not always been easy. Any bookshop in any town will sell any number of books detailing the precise moment that "victory" in Europe was declared; what time that news was broadcast to listeners by the BBC, and even the name of the last Allied soldier to be killed before peace was proclaimed. All of these facts can be learnt if that is the inclination of the reader.

What these books provide is an "instant history" in which facts are rarely subject to later alteration or significant change as a result of new material becoming available. And seldom do these facts become susceptible to later change if the opinion-formers who created them maintain a vested interest in keeping the 'facts' alive, or at least ensure that no meaningful alteration is made to them. For sheer volume of words, if nothing else, no other conflict in history has been portrayed so unremittingly, and no other war reported so one-sided.

This has always caused problems for the serious student of history and in making rational interpretation of what has been presented. It is made even harder just as much by what is not disclosed as what is. If the war had ended a dozen years later, by which time television vastly out-influenced radio as a means of reaching the masses, we could be practically certain, however, that it would have told no different tale than the former except in an even more sanitised fashion.

Very little has changed in the last forty-years to alter the perception of the "gallant, democratic Allies" fighting to "stop Hitler" for an "anti-fascist" world either, negative motivations though they are. Words like "victory" and "triumph," though platitudinous in use, pale when held to the light of the day: but consequently invalidates any real need to explain what the war was actually being fought for, thereby buffering any critical study of the triumphant regimes and their rulers' policies.

Most people have not learned what they 'know' about the Second World War from history books written by professors however: their knowledge has been formed on a daily basis from newspaper articles and recreated motion pictures, and they rely on these same sources for the political interpretation of it. Fifty-years ago, when bellicose "first hand" reports were cabled across Europe regaling everything from the advances made by the Allied forces to the inhuman atrocities committed by the bösch — even about lamp-shades made from human flesh, no less! — few men were lucid enough to understand their significance: not just for the duration of the war, but also, and more importantly, their relation to the precipitates of the rapidly shifting balance of power in Europe.

How true it would be to say that every foreign correspondent explicitly understood what he was doing in the months leading to war is arguable; many of whom had become as whipped up by the prevailing atmosphere of frenzied hatred against everything German as their readers had been back at home and were subject to the same conditioning. By the time war was fully underway however, no power was greater than that of the reporter mixing opinion with fact to approximate full truth.

It was their job solely to concern themselves with how the story could be presented to the public, how it affected opinion, and was as much based on gossip and rumour as it was on fact. Moreover, it was only the right opinion — that is, their opinion — on the facts that mattered, and not as they necessarily might be. And there is no reason to think it is any different for the controlled media in 1995.

Forming world opinion to the detriment of one nation today however, is generally not as simple as it was half a century ago with war raging in Europe and a manufactured bloodlust to be sated. Today, it requires vastly more complicated and sophisticated machinery, carefully developed psychological techniques, and the means to sustain it at full-throttle day in, day out. Unfortunately, peoples' instincts have become more unsound and their reasoning less well-adjusted in the post-war era, while our enemies have unified and strengthened these techniques.

That's why the controlled media can bank on insincere, superficial, and adroit politicians to evoke the correct emotions in the masses when they talk about whacking Saddam in Iraq again, or a stropky warlord in Somalia, just like when they whacked Hitler in Germany all those years ago. It's generally a pretty effective persuasion machine too, despite the campaign to cover-up what really happened in Europe fifty-years ago becoming ever more exaggerated, discredited, and transparent.

Gradually, the facts of what happened are becoming more widely known and that's a good thing: it was the darkest period in our race's history, with no problem today that does not have its roots in that fratricidal war, and it is why we must understand all that we can about it.

A substantial portion of war propaganda has never been resolved however, or at best obscured, and that must beg several questions. Why, for example, do we know beyond moderate doubt the number of soldiers killed at Arnhem — on both sides — while we may never know how many innocents perished during the Allied fire-bombing of Hamburg? Why do we think we know that fewer, rather than more, were incinerated in the firestorm of Dresden, and that the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki was a good thing? And isn't it at least a little bit strange that virtually every schoolchild can yelp "Six million!" when asked how many Jews were exterminated by Hitler's Germany, and yet blank looks abound when asked how many non-Jews were killed, anywhere?

How have we been conditioned to accept that despite all of the human cost our losses matter very little, and yet the losses claimed to be suffered by one specific group matters over everything else? What has caused this situation, and what has made Whites more susceptible to this conditioning than any other racial group?

The well-refined propaganda machine honed during World War Two, primarily orchestrated in the crusade against Hitler, is only part of the reason; albeit a massively influential one. But every little psychological trick and every major psychological technique mastered before and during the war, has since extended into ceaseless promotion of the "Holocaust" story.

Not only has it reaped undeserved sympathy for Jews and financial indemnity for Israel — currently in the region of $50 billion¹ — it has also been wielded to excuse Jewish behaviour in the non-Jewish world and crack apart the last remaining vestiges of resistance to Jewish hegemony.

Irrespective of how powerful these factors are, however, they cannot be said to be the most dangerous tangents of the myth. Otherwise, all that would be necessary to end the Jews' meddling and devastating leverage in non-Jewish affairs would be to publicly expose them as liars and cease all reparations to Israel. The latter will not happen because no White nation has had a responsible and race-conscious government since their last claim to have been Holocausted, while the former is to treat the symptom and not the cause of the disease in an increasingly sick and Judaised world.

For example, there have been a number of increasing revelations concerning the extent of the Jews' suffering but have not abated the wailing of the promoters of the myth one iota, despite some rapid rethinking and backtracking in recent years (See The Oak No. 7, "Desperate Actions of Liars").

Understanding the sheer contempt for the Aryan mind that the "Holocaust" legend exemplifies is the key to understanding what it means fifty-years on, and how to deal with its corollaries objectively today. That its creators did not take the pains to make the claims even remotely plausible highlights the point.

THOUSANDS OF POLES demonstrated their opposition to the Just Act of 2017 (S.447) by marching through Warsaw in defiance of Israel's demand for €300 billion as reparation for their role in the Holocaust. Although Poland is but one of the 47 countries signed to the 2009 Terezin Declaration, which promises the Jews will continue to get whatever they ask for, it was only prime minister Mateusz Morawiecki who told them where to get off. What a shame there now seems only one European leader willing to put his own kind first.

Regardless how shabby the lies become, however, outweighing all other considerations is something enormously more consequential to the survival of Israel and the goal of Jewish hegemony in a mongrelised future.

For any society to prosper it must be peopled with those whose values and goals are the same, whose long-term view of life is motivated by the same guiding principles, and its members must also be of the same racial stock with a proper physical and spiritual basis for survival. It is these values, this basis for survival and advancement which, in part, is exactly what Hitler had returned to Germany and its people. It is why Germany had to be destroyed, and it is why Levantine ethics had to prevail in the post-war years: dare the Jews be "Holocausted" again.

So when those war correspondents returned from Europe, they didn't go back to being door-to-door salesmen and fruit importers, they continued where they had left off: establishing academic journals and publishing houses for future generations of goyim who might miss the point. When they began pushing feminism, racial "equality," pluralism, and everything else geared to finish White racial identity and cohesiveness in Europe, even conscientious and thoughtful Whites who opposed them because morally disarmed in the face of the "Holocaust." The implications were clear: Whites facilitated the annihilation of Jews explicitly by operating the gas chambers or, implicitly, by failing to stop it.

If we had been able to prevent our instincts and remaining sound judgement from caving in under fifty-years of perpetual "Holocaust" propaganda, whether so many million Jews were exterminated or not, it would have as little effect on us as how many Indians were killed at Delhi in 1857, or how many Rwandans have been slaughtered in 1995 without the right conditioning in the first place.

This is something the hoax propagandists clearly understand; and it is something we must also come to understand if the best of our race is to survive. We need not judge what is "good" or "evil" from what is written in a thousand 'history' books: we can only judge from that which we feel from within the furthest reaches of our souls; from that will come the absolute conviction of rightness, from which the final and greatest goals on Earth.

Nevertheless, there still remains the implicit matter of proving them liars in the meantime; exposing their deceitfulness and destroying their credibility solely as a prelude to removing their yoke from our necks forever.

But there are other reasons why it is necessary to keep the "Holocaust" alive and kicking and screaming into the new century: not only for the Jews themselves, but also for all of their Gentile apologists who have excused the Jews behaviour in Palestine and their reprehensible conduct in the Western nations for so long. Indignation and outrage can be a dangerous thing after all, and how would those uppity goyim react if they found out they had been lied to for so long?

The chances are, alas, they will not do anything at all; not if previous experience is anything to go by. Ask anyone what the "Holocaust" has got in common with the control of the news and entertainment media, or the prohibition of questioning the claim of Jewish groups and the reply will be the same as it was fifty-years ago, and that's why it doesn't matter when the controlled news media glibly resurrects the figure that a third of non-Jews once doubtful of the "Holocaust" is now practically zero. It's also why they can be just as certain of getting a significant portion of the populace to agree that stamping out racial consciousness is the number one priority of the modern world order, and why most Gentiles are willing to degrade themselves in sniveling acts of repentance for these imagined sins.

Demonising all Gentiles in the first place, as implicit Holocausters if not outright mass killers, absolves the Jews and their complicitous Allied powers of the greatest murderous intent ever recorded and shifts the culpability onto the backs of the White race as a whole.

Once people could be convinced of the damage done to the Jews in Hitler's Germany and to feel pity for them, the more justified the behaviour came for wiping Germany off the face of the world. The more heinously they were able to convince Gentiles they had been treated, the more justification Gentiles had for terror-bombing German cities on their behalf; and that gave the Allies more reason to cover-up their role in making the world a safe place for Jews again, or admit to collaboration and mass murder. And an uncomfortable and guilt-ridden race is much less likely to do anything about them as a race might be if it couldn't care less who was "gassed" in Europe fifty-odd years ago, only that we were duped into fighting for the wrong side.

Dragging the collaborators out of their beds and frog-marching them to the nearest open space with nothing but a last cigarette for company might be a little way off at the moment, but it's still a little too close for comfort to most of them: and these are not men known for taking risks. Most of what they do is done with deliberate and cold calculation, just as it was fifty-years ago in Berlin. A minority may have been able to retain an inkling of healthy instincts and doubt the claims of the Jews themselves, but they are certainly not about to change sides now; not after they have so much vested interest in guarding the aura of blamelessness and untouchability of Jews, and with branding the "Holocaust" indelibly on Gentiles' souls.

It doesn't mean the Jews will give up telling their tales either, for as long as they can be certain that their lackeys will continue repeating them and most of the stupid goyim continue to believe them.

THE JEWS have been able to paint themselves as the only victims in the Second World War; that they are innocent and everyone else is in the wrong. It will not help their cause if the attention and sympathy of Europeans is divided between Auschwitz and the millions of Gentiles who perished in genocide elsewhere. It is advantageous for the Jews to keep rubbing our noses in the Holocaust to make us feel guilty, and conceal their prime role in facilitating the extermination of 30 million+ of our racial kinsmen in Europe on their behalf.

At the other end of the spectrum there will be others, sick of the Jews' whining and thoroughly convinced of their mountainous pack of lies, reckless enough to contend that no Jews were killed during the Second World War solely for being Jews — which is almost certainly not true.

Some Jews were killed in Europe and at the Eastern Front fifty-years ago; deliberately and without remorse; in groups and individually; for partisan, pro-Communist activity, and also because the rounding up and shooting of a few would do wonders for drying-up anti-German activity in that region.

If we were counting, however, we might say that the deliberate and wilful terror-bombing of Dresden which killed at least 202,040² German civilians, most of whom were women and children, is more than the confirmed number of Jews who died at Auschwitz during its entire operation; and most of those died primarily of typhus and other health problems, not as a result of systematic extermination.

We could also add the number of German POW's killed in captivity after the cessation of hostilities to the number of women and young girls raped and butchered by "our noble Soviet allies", and it would still only be the Jews' losses that would count. We could add the number of British, French, and American soldiers killed fighting for Communism to the number of ethnic Germans, Poles, Latvians, Ukrainians, and Russians slaughtered under the aegis of Jewish military commissars, and still it would only be the damages done to Jews that would matter.

But keeping count is immaterial. It has been immaterial for four thousand years and more. Otherwise, the sick creatures who find the thought grossly abhorrent that the Germans might have done to death a few million Jews, ought also be compelled to be nauseated at the tens of millions of their own racial kinsmen butchered because of Jewish communism.

It is this same fashionable and mindless conformity which prodded Life magazine readers to write in universal condemnation at the photograph of a headless rooster being kept alive as the epitome of cruelty, and yet were also writing in ubiquitous savage glee at the pictures of the corpses of slaughtered German women and raped teenage girls in the Occupied Zones of post-war Germany.

It is also why the Jews can be certain that any time an amendment to the Public Order Act is demanded their collaborators will come running, and the goyim banked on to agree with making the world safe for Jews and ensure they aren't "Holocausted" again.

² Figure quoted in 1994 by Hans Schmidt, Chairman of the German American National Action Committee. Equally credible sources now put the number of women, children, and the elderly who perished in one appalling night of genocide upwards of 400,000.

Misery Spreads

Most of the major construction firms have built new sites and estates in the Green Belt surrounding London for quite some time now, building in places previously forbidden to them because the capital has become so overcrowded.

What all of this has actually meant for the White families, who escaped to these rural areas earlier however, are now left facing the same problems as those who remained in London.

One prime example is Harlow in Essex. Once upon a time, it was a nice 'new town' where people had a good way of life; but Harlow is nothing like that now. Today, Harlow is ruined. In fact, Harlow is under siege from the same type of Black gangs committing exactly the same crimes as other Black gangs are doing in London; who have made this area no longer safe at night.

Another place unable to escape from the Black invasion of Essex is the quiet little village of North Weald where The Travellers Rest Hotel was suitably apt towards the nature of the village and had been for decades. Since a London Council bought the hotel however, all that has changed.

The White families who enjoyed a Sunday roast together no longer go there, because the only people who do are Africans, Algerians, Syrians, and everyone else just like them shipped in over recent years.

I was born in London a long time ago, and enjoyed my youth in the East End until I could take no more. Today I live in Essex but that too is going the same way as the capital, and is rapidly on the decline.

England is nearing the point of no return because not a single government has ever cared about the Aryan Folk of our Anglo-Saxon nation. But it's not too late, so don't give up!

It's all in a good cause.

Glad for British Movement

I found my copy of A New Awakening so pleasing to the eye. The issues I have seen so far have had excellent covers that were very striking, and the content inside written in a very positive manner.

I make this point after years of reading racial-nationalist magazines that more often than not depicted hoards of non-Whites either entering Europe, or rioting on British streets if they were here already.

I know what I am against of course, and I can see full well the changing demography of my hometown; and I know that what's happening in Manchester is being repeated all across our nation.

Today, I am pleased to see British Movement leading the way in putting forward positive images and ideas of national rebirth and White survival. I think BM needs to maintain this bright and positive message. We should all bear in mind the great many young people who will be coming to our movement over the next few years who will be delighted the confident and strong message of Our Cause.

Editor's Comment

The only acknowledgement this not quite so brave soldier could ordinarily expect is a quick slap, but other than the typically foul language, in some way far worse response to A New Awakening came from a couple of others who took umbrage over its substance and tone.

And most of those came from people who really should know better by now. "What is so wrong with non-Whites?" they said. "Some of them are alright, so why shouldn't we have them in our country?" That was the general gist of mostly what they wanted to know, anyway.

Actually, those question are not quite so simple to answer as you may think; especially to those already mind-numbed and confused to begin with. And if they were confused by the time they were out of nappies, it naturally follows they will ask a confused question as adults later. So how can you give them the right answers if they do not have the right questions in the first place?

Besides, our correspondent's questions are misdirected and largely unimportant in any case; they are inflammatory and meaningless. It is the sort of disconnected "logic" the controlled media use to distort any fact they don't like, and this floods down to our classrooms as soon as the morning bell has rung.

Of course, this is not the correct question our correspondent should be asking anyway. In fact, the only question that demands an answer is the one question never asked. Rather than his fuzzy-minded worry about what is wrong with non-Whites — when it's as obvious as the nose on his face — a better question would be: “What is so wrong about White people?” Of course, several other questions follow and all are equally related.

What is so wrong with White people having their own nations? What is so wrong with White towns and cities? What is wrong with having White schools and classrooms? And what is wrong with even asking these questions in the first place?

And these are the questions our e-mailer ought to ask of himself before gormlessly contacting us: because these are the only important questions, and it has nothing whatsoever to do with “what is wrong with non-Whites” in general.

It's hard to blame him too much of course, because they are questions to which he and the rest of the sleepwalking masses have never been exposed to before: and that is because these are the questions that the sick propaganda spewing forth from the controlled media is designed to distract us from asking, much less think about.

So they'll carry on with everything they have been told to carry on with in the meantime. They'll continue to believe “predominantly White” is a dirty term and its implication that something evil must be going on in the process. And they'll carry on thinking that anyone who insists on living only with other White people is mean-spirited, intolerant and non-inclusive, a hater and/or a racist; so they don't mind joining in with the antagonism towards anyone who attempts to fix this tragically flawed logic in our people.

And that's what our correspondent was essentially doing, whether he knew it or not. Unfortunately, his jumbled “thinking” cannot be corrected through reasonable discussion or compromise while those who created the problem are frantically working just as hard as they always have been to make sure that problem is not fixed today.

DEAR WHITE WOMEN: WHITE BABIES ARE WHITE SUPREMACY

By Todd VanWert | Updated May 31, 2019, 10:41pm EDT

f t s SHARE

When I see a white woman with a white baby, I see the perpetuation of white supremacy and it scares me. As a person of color to white women, your babies make me feel unwelcome and like my children will never have an equal opportunity. This is not hate for white babies. It is the logical conclusion of a person of color operating under a historical system of white supremacy.

If strong white women really are allies then they will work with us to end white supremacy by making the choice not to have white babies. White women are the key to ending white supremacy and the means for equality. It is the only path forward for a future of peace and the

THE HYPOCRISY, IMMORALITY, AND IRRESPONSIBILITY of accepting ‘White guilt’ has undermined White integrity, dignity, and racial commitment. The mindless push toward an ever more inclusive egalitarianism and debased democracy has ugly consequences with more racial degradation, and is a threat to the very meaning of our existence.

So unless he is capable of pushing all the nonsensical media claptrap aside and recover the sense he was born with, he will forever remain incapable of accepting cold, hard realities.

Rather than another brainless attempt to make us feel guilty for trying to preserve the White race, he may eventually come to realise that every promotion of “diversity”, multiculturalism, and “inclusion” is directly set on preparing the minds of White people into accepting ideas that are lethal to the race: and that includes him.

It is ridiculous to say that is “evil” to work for a separate White nation with safe neighbourhoods, and it is wickedly absurd to call self-preservation “hate”; but beyond the mere inanity of it all, more than anything else, these are dangerous attacks upon our continued existence. And if people accept even one of these terribly illogical “ideas”, if they accept even one of them as being valid, they will eventually become exterminated by them. It really is that simple.

That's something our correspondent must quickly come to understand, and must have drilled into his psyche before he wastes any more time looking for answers to the wrong questions. He must pursue every second available to him in pursuit of the right answers to the correct questions instead, because it is long overdue — and time is running out.

Whether he likes the answers or not is irrelevant, but only then can he finally make decisions about the future he wants.

Toadies' Ploy Backfires

There is no more disreputable profession than that of journalist; notorious, almost to a man, for their inability to entertain an independent thought. Collectively, and without exception, however, they are lickspittles, hypocrites and liars steeped in an especially virulent form of liberalism. Utterly devoid of honour and with the morals of an alley cat, the journalist, therefore will cling tightly to the norm of his special crowd — that of his fellow journalists — rather than to that of the general mass of citizens.

Presumably, most are generally bright enough to know what is going on, but will do anything to avoid reporting the facts of who is doing it, and why they are doing it, through fear of dismissal from the trade which pays for their handbags and holidays.

That is the most obvious reason for sticking to the party-line of course, but there is a greater fear than just safeguarding a monthly pay-cheque which keeps them grovelling at the feet of their bosses.

The greatest fear is that people will become informed without their help so are forever determined to stifle any thought contrary to their own — even when they know the doctrines they are paid to promote are false. But what really rattles the teeth of the liberal-Left commentariat, more than anything else, is the specific display of any resistance to their mendacious propaganda.

Once upon a time, the best way for the controlled media to counter this was by crying "Wolf!" at the slightest sign of an unapproved idea; thereby alerting the public of an outrage they believe John and Jane Everyday should feel too. Actually, this tactic worked extremely well and could practically guarantee their bosses a favourable response. Unfortunately — for them, anyway — it is nowhere near as easy to provoke the desired reaction from their readers today; and they only have themselves to blame for that.

Just as the lies of Aesop's shepherd boy eventually backfired, so it is becoming for the corrupters of our people today; and often just as spectacularly in most cases. Out of many on which we could report, there are three particular instances from last year which were especially pertinent to BM.

On their own, these examples may seem minor; nothing more than a slight hiccup in the controlled media's campaign to force the White populace into accepting the concept of "thought crime." When looked at in a wider perspective however, they provide tangible proof that there are still a few places left in Britain in which the spirit of resistance to the mind-controllers has not been completely extinguished.

In this case, it comes from the East Midlands, Kent, and Scotland; but, really, it could come from anywhere — such is the frequency of similar propaganda drives across the country. And such persistence, such defiance, truly terrifies our enemies; what a wonderful thing that is! Here it is, 80 years after we butchered our racial kinsmen in Germany on their behalf, concrete proof that some men still refuse to lay down and die.

First to come unstuck was The Derby Telegraph who tagged the appearance of British Movement stickers in the market town of Heanor as "disgusting." Obviously, it wasn't long before their Nottinghamshire subsidiaries also got in the act; in fact, the same story was later carried by every other crooked newspaper across both counties, who all declared that the call to 'Stop Building Mosques!' and 'Reject Multiculturalism!' was "outrageous." Then, as is typical, the ubiquitous 'unnamed citizen' trotted out and was duly quoted; and being "a person of colour" the controlled media leapt at the chance of pandering to so-called minorities once again.

Except, this time, their obsequious fawning at the feet of

THE CONTROLLED MEDIA campaign against hate crime is primarily about setting within the public a mindset such that they will go along with further "hate speech" laws. They want to deny us and others like us, the right to freedom of expression as build up towards criminalising our race as a whole.

others, ahead of the concerns of their own kind, did not go down at all well with folk in the East Midlands; who promptly told the editor where to get off. It certainly wasn't the brightest idea, then, for one of his more ambitious step-and-fetch-it's to open a 'comment' box when posting the article online.

Rather than the usual outpouring of agreement expected, alas, what followed was a torrent of vitriol instead. In fact, 'Vinnie-jones001' was so incensed that he fixed his anger directly on the journalist responsible: "Where does this sticker imply hatred against Muslims? Honestly, it is you who are drumming up hatred in the community....by placing false news stories. #FAKE."

He wasn't the only one who has grown sick and tired of the controlled media's cute angles either. 'Voxcoat,' for instance, was even more up-front with the editor, and his unequivocal statement: "Come on, it's right what these people are saying!" inspired other townsfolk to also speak out. Soon, the 'comment' box was inundated with similar messages — at least, of a sort — but much to the editor's despair, and to the terror of his untouchable journalists certainly.

Some were implicit in their approval but given their fear of the smear to which they have succumbed skirted around the issue somewhat, while others less fearful were more explicit and forthright in their defence of BM's message.

Even so, there was one absolute shared by all across the discussion board, and that was utter revulsion for the controlled media.

'RealTalk,' for instance, definitely knows that he is being led, instructed, and hectored by his "betters" who are forcing him to conform with their particularly bent standards; and he wants to put them straight: "Nobody should try to make me feel embarrassed about my nationality....This country could very easily turn into a cinder block, and Muslim atrocities are the match that could spark it off."

That clear enough, Ed? It certainly would have been had he had spoken to his fellow collaborators at The Kent Messenger anyway. You see, much the same thing happened down here when British Movement stickers appeared in the St Dunstan's area of Canterbury: except, that is, the Men of Kent were far more contemptuous.

In fact, the online comments were so vitriolic towards The Kent Messenger that one hireling, who is evidently more astute than his colleagues and could see where it was heading, put a stop to any others appearing long before the office closed for the day.

That probably saved his job as well; presumably, the tabloid's proof-reader was not so lucky. Otherwise, why on earth did he not pull the editor to one side and correct him, before clipping him round the ear? Surely he must have known that it is not only students at the city's University who can read after all?

In that case, it beggars belief why The Messenger's front-page showed this picture underneath a headline reading: "NF stickers have been appearing round the city streets, prompting anger from the residents." Actually, the residents were very angry indeed; and 119 of them quickly told the editor it was he and his bed-mates who caused it.

It was only a couple of the wimpiest interlopers who agreed with what the newspaper was trying to get across, and that hardly comes as a surprise. What was surprising, however, was how many ordinary folk immediately set about showing them for the idiots they are, and thereby destroying the myth that "Diversity is a wonderful thing!"

So well done 'Purewhite,' who wrote: "These stickers should be everywhere! MAKE BRITAIN GREAT AGAIN!" not only because 'Itsabigdeal' agreed, but for going on to ask if the people responsible "could go to central London, Covent Garden to be precise, and remove the thousands of anti-British stickers up there because they are plastered everywhere. Haven't seen much about that in this newspaper." You're not wrong there fella, but don't hold your breath waiting to either.

'Vorxian99' was of the same opinion: "The U.K is living proof that multi-cultural societies do not work. One demographic of people is hell-bent on blowing us all up, another hell-bent on gun and knife crime, and another hell-bent on de-evaluating society." Could we really have put it any better ourselves?

Somewhat bizarrely, both The Derby Telegraph and The Kent Messenger were accused of being hand in hand with British Movement, purely because the electronic addresses of our office and that of SEL were clearly visible in the photos used. And that disturbed one of the real haters, big time; primarily because he/she/it believes that no one should be exposed to any idea which is contrary of theirs.

That did not wash one little bit with 'TruthHurts,' however, who said: "[it is] important not to censor these people....so others can read their message, go to the website, and make their own minds up whether these people are crackpot racists, or if they have something worth saying." Isn't that all we initially ask? That people be given an alternative to the hogwash policies rammed down their throats? Of course it is. And that terrifies the mind-controllers.

LET THEM HATE SO LONG AS THEY FEAR. And an awakened citizenry terrifies the cheerleaders of the apocalypse more than anything.

It is also why The Perth Courier prevented any public comments from appearing in their own later "exposé of racist hate crime." After seeing what happened to their colleagues in the East Midlands and Kent, both they and BBC Scotland thought better of the idea and allowed print-space only for those in condemnation at the show of "It's OK to be White!" posters around Dundee. Of course they did.

John Swinney, MSP for Perthshire North, is one creature habitually guaranteed of providing the desired response and he wasn't about to let them down this time either.

"These stickers are atrocious," he said. "They have no place in Perth or any other part of the country" he whimpered. And The Perth Courier love that sort of thing; it was exactly what they needed before that 'unnamed citizen' — aye, him, again — could be unleashed from his closet to tell the world that: "These stickers are disgusting!"

THE DISPLAY of sentiment such as this will soon be considered "ethnic terrorism" if the mind-controllers are allowed to continue getting their own way.

Presumably, Swinney knows his relationship with The Courier is nothing more than a flirtatious one, merely a prelude to the foreplay enjoyed by the 'unnamed citizen'; but neither mind being used in the process if it makes easier for The Courier to bend over backwards and accommodate the greased-up trash of Perth Against Racism to finish off: "It's sickening and disgusting to know that people think like this."

Quite how Dundonians will come to react at such opinion of them, however, is an entirely different matter. But let us hope that process does not take too long, and that some part of their thinking involves what best to do with an even shorter length of rope.

LET OUR ENEMIES know their campaign to silence us is futile. Let the corrupters of our people understand that enough is enough! And we WILL have our country back!

Feasting on the Goyim

These three episodes, on their own, may seem unimportant; each case not much really worth writing home for. When combined, however, they become far more significant and are tangible proof of a nation embroiled in a war.

Traditional nationalists — that is, those of a largely conservative nature — refer to it as a 'cultural' war, while less compromising and more blunt-spoken patriots will call it a 'race war.' Actually, the truth lays somewhere in-between and these few incidents can more accurately be described as the inevitable by-product of a cold civil war which occasionally flares hot.

It is a complex war that few White people dare acknowledge — much less understand — even if most are at least vaguely aware of it: their conscience only pricked in the wake of another terrorist atrocity, or if the ever more frequent race riots have brought terror directly to their doorstep.

Even then, the vast majority will draw the curtains, go back to the TV, and choose to ignore it; pretend that by hiding away, they can make believe it doesn't exist. They might have a bit of a grumble at work the next day, of course, but it will only ever be in hushed tones because none dare now speak aloud.

Why is that? And how have our enemies managed to bully a substantial portion of the populace — for half a century, at least — into silence? Part of the reason is because older generations have less than fond memories of the social upheaval in the 1960s, and it has left them confused today. More importantly, it has prevented them from grasping fully what is happening around them now, and who is behind it.

They are just too naive and too comfortable to realise that the disciples of those who would demonstrate at the drop of a hat in demand of free speech in the 1960s, are those who are the most vociferous campaigners to limit others' freedom of expression today.

Besides, it was not free speech that our enemies were supporting a generation ago at all; it was freedom for the Jews and their collaborators to turn society on its head. And their main concern today is doing whatever it takes to prevent racially conscious Whites from undoing any of the changes wrought then, or who might now be able to lead our folk in a different direction to the one they have chosen for us.

Yes, there is no doubt the liberal left cranks won their revolution in the Swinging Sixties, but complete victory continues to elude them. That strange gaggle of non-White racialists, leftists, and radical feminists know that the present situation is volatile for one thing, and that multiracial, multicultural societies are inherently unstable for another.

That is why they want to impose further restrictions on free speech in the hope it can delay the melting-pot from boiling over a little longer; because, like most cold wars, it is mainly a propaganda war, a psychological war, a war of words, and a war of ideas. And it is a war that the forces of multiculturalism are undoubtedly winning; let us not dare think otherwise: But for how much longer?

If for nothing else, these three episodes provide our enemies with enough evidence that not all folk will be intimidated into limiting their own speech, in spite of the endless campaigns. No longer are folk steamrolled into believing that to say something "politically incorrect" will result in prosecution. No longer are they confused when the controlled media tries to convince them that display of resistance to a polyglot society amounts to "race hatred" and is, therefore, illegal.

Words like "racist" and "hater" no longer evoke pangs of revulsion or guilt in the remaining healthy few left of our folk. No longer will the proudest Whites bow their heads and let others have their way with them. They have simply had enough.

That is why, come what may, we must continue to dare speak out. Our job is to keep the heat on those who would destroy us, give encouragement to our kin with a message of White survival in a rapidly darkening world.

Vixens

For those not already aware, Vixens is the operational name of British Movement Women's Division, and this being our first article perhaps it is best to begin with offering some basic insight as to what we are about, a brief overview of our hopes, and a quick outline of our aims.

So what are BMWD/Vixens all about? Fundamentally, our role is to protect, support, nurture, and feed every one of those unconditionally willing to fight for Our Cause. We do it because we share their overwhelming concern for our race that guides every single one in their efforts, and we do it because we share the desire to protect our race, our nation, our heritage, and our destiny for future generations.

We support the hard work of those fighting on the front line in any way we can, and we do it because it allows BMWD begin to nurture a sense of belonging among our kindred at the same time. Now, the undertaking to feed is a strong personal urge within, as something all of those attending an AGM will attest at being well fed and watered throughout the day.

On a more personal note, I have been an active member of British Movement since 1999 also being one of the first BMWD members to speak at an AGM in 2011, and have done so ever since.

That same year we began the Children's Christmas parties, and these were a constant feature of The Vixens calendar until circumstances dictated otherwise, and a brief hiatus was unavoidable. It was a dreadful feeling at forced to let White children down at such a special time for them, the only compensation found in 2013 by beginning to cater for the AGM that same year.

That still continues to this day of course and, better still, the Christmas Parties have resumed; always receiving brilliant feedback.

Naturally, I am very proud of starting these things but find greater encouragement in seeing the increased level of activism today. And although I am aware this quick introduction might be seen merely as my tale and of the projects I started, it most certainly should not be thought of as an exercise in ego; the sole purpose is nothing other than to illustrate just how far a little initiative and a bit of hard work can go for those willing.

Even simple things, a cake raffle for instance, have helped raise money for BM in the past, just as many other quick and easy tasks help today; but now we have even more members willing to do whatever helps.

THIS HAND-PAINTED WOOD-BURNED clock is perfect example of BMWD's work as means towards an end.

Most recently, a couple of BMWD members began to create a range of wood burned crafts to help with the cost of supplies necessary for our day to day function, towards cost of the Christmas parties, or even as advance contribution towards future events planned. And despite what every hobbyist may sadly think, anyone living in the real world knows that nothing can happen without cost to someone and that nothing ever comes free.

Vixens elsewhere are currently working on assignments which are both relevant and necessary to the immediate situation around them; there really are some great things to come from BMWD this year! Actually, many initiatives are already long past the planning stages, and we will play a large part in seeing them come to fruition.

In the meantime, we have our own regularly updated blog-site [www.bmwdvixens.com] and another page on Telegram [T.me Vixens] helping to spread our message of racial renewal further afield. More than anything, British Movement aims to restore a strong sense of community spirit within our folk, and Vixens' role towards that end is by helping our people in need of help right now. Squadron Hit New Heights

"The Flame Still Burns" by BM SEL member - Andy White

Any reviewer or critic in a specialist field ought to know the lay of the land before he is allowed in print. He should at least have knowledge of other bands comparable to his subject for the reader's reference, and that really doesn't apply here. So having never been massively affected by much of the "RAC scene" — or whatever you want to call it — this was certainly an onerous task.

Of course, musical taste is a very personal thing indeed and ordinarily dependent on the listener's mood at the time. For instance, we all have a shitty day at work every now and then so blowing the roof off with a bit of Slayer makes up for it when getting home. On another night a bit of Fleetwood Mac might be fancied instead, or it could be the Stone Roses on a warm Sunday afternoon; it might even be some Primal Scream before going to football the following Saturday, but it really could be anything. Each to their own, as the old saying goes.

Of far more concern, however, was how to pass judgement on a band I have known for more than half a lifetime now. Far worse was the nagging fear at being accused of sycophancy which came with it. "Of course he's going to say how good it is. They're his mates, what else do you expect him to say?" was top of the list, but mostly because of the severe injustice that would do Squadron if true. Then again, what if it turned out their music didn't exactly float my boat these days; so how could it be a fair and honest review if I didn't particularly like it, mates or not?

Fortunately, the band made my job a whole lot easier within minutes of the first hearing. Actually, there is very good reason why a point is made of saying "the first time" as well; because immediately it had finished, it was played again: yes, The Flame Still Burns really is that good.

Of course, Squadron have been around for a long time; 35 years,

AVAILABLE FROM THE SUNWHEEL, PO Box 6, Heckmodwike, West Yorkshire, WF16 0XF for £12.00 post paid in the UK. This is an outstanding release with wide appeal; not just for those inclined by habit, but for White people worldwide. Highly recommended!

on and off, but so have many other bands — cabaret acts better off at Pontin's, and the pensioners rehashing their greatest hits in stadiums included. What is remarkable about Squadron, however, is their ongoing desire and ability to develop the music of their original influences and to make a sound which is completely their own.

For instance, although the early LP's were pretty much derivative of their peers at the time, the band matured naturally and began to incorporate many other different musical styles over the years — drifting away from the early sound of archetypical, mid-tempo RAC through to a more aggressive hardcore approach, culminating in 1999's very polished and professional Age of Conspiracy.

And then there was silence. For nigh on twenty-years. Nevertheless, all of that experience and talent quite clearly had not gone to waste and the eclectic progression shines through on arguably their finest release, The Flame Still Burns; but which is the show of a band at its peak, undoubtedly.

A meandering bass riff is the perfect opening to the title track, made more haunting by the accompanying Gregorian chants, before the merciless onslaught begins.

Vocals are heartfelt and convincing, the lyrics sincere and passionate throughout. Whether it is railing against the controlled media in Indoctrination for example, or imploring the audience to act before it's too late in Defend Europe, there is no doubt it comes from a band who mean what they say.

Guitars are incisive at all times, and razor-sharp in their use of harmonics, while the rhythm section adds weight and authority to this extraordinary performance continually.

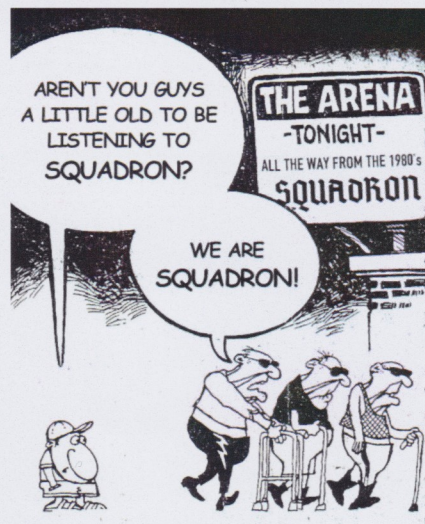

In fact, it is difficult to see how this release could sound any other way; mostly because, as far as the writer is concerned anyway, they simply couldn't play any way other than this. That is, given their pedigree, Squadron could never try to sound like any other particular band, nor have their musical decisions dictated by the norm of aesthetics alone.

Having said that, there are some comparisons that can be made to other bands — although only in a vague sense, admittedly. The intro to All Father Hail, for example, could well have appeared on any mid-period Manowar release. The staccato guitar scales would fit comfortably on any of the better Metallica albums, while the double bass drums are reminiscent of the speed metal bands which defined that mid-80s scene throughout. On the other hand, the pounding drums which prelude Sacred Bloodlines would not have been out of place on Kings of the Wild Frontier either!

Perhaps, then, it is such diverse style which gives The Flame Still Burns its wide appeal. There is a tirelessly inventive, genre-splicing genius at work here, producing never-before-imagined spirit-raising concoctions; and that is not hyperbole, by any means.

For instance: When Squadron played the BM fundraiser last July, we had members from the far North who had travelled to support the work of their comrades in South East London at the afternoon meeting, and the gig in the evening was just part of the day far as they were concerned.

Gallows humour is often the most accurate, but this self-deprecating portrayal does the band no justice. Humorous as it is, Squadron deserve reverence not just for their longevity but undying commitment to the cause instead. The Flame Still Burns, indeed, mein kameraden.

That all changed, however, the minute Squadron had finished their set: each buying what could possibly be their first CD by a band of that ilk.

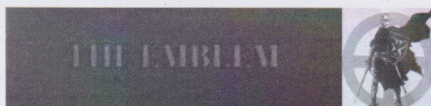

In fact, the South Shields organiser phoned a couple of days later to say: “Blimey, we had no idea how good Squadron are! Played it all the way home! Can you send us another four copies?” Not a bad accolade from someone who also freely admits at never being particularly struck before.

It is difficult — and inappropriate — to pick a personal favourite from the ten tracks on offer here: each one exceptional, in its own way. If push came to shove, however, then special mention should be given to the closing opus, Do Right and Fear No One, in homage to fallen rider Ollie Jennings: a true defender of the faith.

Tragically, Ollie died too young and too soon in May 2017, his long-term partner suffering serious injuries in the process (see Awakening Number 6), having much affect on those who knew the man. That Squadron opted to close this extraordinary CD in sombre honour of a comrade never to be forgotten is, perhaps, the most fitting award we can give.

MUSLIM GROOMING GANGS

No End in Sight

Since the first report and some convictions back in 2003, Not much has changed. Still no protection for our underage girls. Even now in 2020 there are still gangs of Muslims in court for raping and abusing white girls as young as 11. These gangs have operated for decades and most of these predators think they are untouchable. The police and the local authorities who were and are still responsible for the protection of these young white girls still only deal with the aftermath and still have nothing in place to stop it happening again and again.

The local authorities and police in early reports about these types of cases always seemed to blame the victim as “they chose this lifestyle”. A child does not choose to be plied with drugs and alcohol and then to be raped by men over and over again. These same authorities and police forces also did not want offend these minority groups by appearing to be racist but these are racist crimes against young white girls. Just another thing that proves multi-culturalism will never work.

The average White person no longer looks on Britain as his family, because he no longer feels part of it; it's just the place he happened to be born, the place he happens to live. The reason for that, primarily, is result of the enormous increase in what liberals and the controlled media fondly call “diversity”: and it has left them confused and fearful today, and with no sense of loyalty to their kin at all.

Media propaganda has taken a deliberate slant to make Whites feel guilty, to kill any sense of racial consciousness we have left. By permitting our enemies to control the news and entertainment we are doing more than merely giving them a decisive influence on our political system, and if we do nothing to counter their poison we also are giving them control of the minds and souls of our children.

They will call us “racists” — we are; those of us who feel a sense of identity, of belonging. They will call us “haters” — we are not; at least, not in the sense of association our enemies deliberately try to create in the minds of John and Jane Everyday. We spend little or no time hating, but a great deal of time to spread understanding with the hope it can benefit our people instead.

Don't Blame the Führer!

By British Movement supporter – Marching On Together

There seems to be growing propensity among nationalists these days, certainly those of the 'populist' variety anyway, to blame Adolf Hitler for the lack of support their individual parties receive; the inference being the supposed crimes of Hitler's National Socialist regime is the single reason behind their constant derisory election results.

That's complete and utter codswallop of course, but it is a stick they still try using to beat modern day racial nationalists with; and the only reason they do it comes from refusing to face up to their own failure, and total inability to deal with it previously. In fact, there's really no difference between them and a spoiled twelve-year old brat who deflects any personal criticism onto someone else, because after all the promises made it is always someone else's fault, it is never his.

I read one article not so long ago which even dared stating it would have been better, "had Adolf Hitler never been born"; and I seem to remember a certain Nick Griffin making the same argument in the pages of Identity some years before where he disgustingly referred to Hitler as being a "disaster for nationalism".

That is disgraceful indolence, and typical of the man of course, but more or less just about sums the whole lot of them up in entirety. And the only reason they keep saying it is because they have continued to lose the political debate for decades beforehand. They have never had the guile or nerve to treat media smears against them appropriately, because their only concern has always been a personal one. Mostly because they don't want to be seen as the wicked 'Nazi's' the controlled media portrays them as, and they will bend over backwards in supine cowardice by saying; "Look what happened when Hitler came to power, six million Jews were gassed! That was awful" instead.

The fault lies not with Hitler, but with members of the White race itself; beginning with their unwillingness to explore the Truth and fight for the existence of our people, and that includes them too. Some 'nationalist' parties are more blameable than others are of course, but all of their members shoulder part of the blame along the line.

Of course, the biggest problem is the largely 'left wing' controlled media which is directed by people who are against British nationalism, and in most cases ferociously anti-British from top to bottom. They despise what Britain has stood for over the centuries, so they push their own agenda by foisting non-White role models on a largely unsuspecting and gullible British public who, after decades of brainwashing, are unable to see the truth for themselves.

Look at virtually every television advert these days for instance. You won't see anything like the healthy White Oxo family anymore of course, all you get instead are heavy starring roles by non-White families in practically all of them. When they don't want to be quite so blatant, the rest will depict a multi-racial couple – generally a White slag and African dad – before the final flourish of a couple of mixed race offspring playing happily at their feet.

And all of this is done deliberately and purposefully to condition the public into accepting that it is natural to see Whites and non-Whites together when nothing could be further from the truth. A cynic may say they seem more interested in promoting miscegenation than the actual product advertised!

Now, I have nothing against non-Whites individually, not if they keep to themselves anyway, but believe all races should be allowed to develop independently of each other, and must be left alone to do so, for good or ill, with their own unique culture and customs intact.

Throughout the years, every other race has had its 'nationalist' hero promoted by the media and worshipped en masse by members of that race, even though some Whites bizarrely feel the need to also; look at the fawning over Ghandi, Malcolm X, Martin Luther King, and Nelson Mandela to name but a few. In complete contrast to this, of course, is any person who stands up for the White race who will quickly find himself denounced as a 'racist', a 'hater', or even a 'terrorist' by the controlled media.

The dangerous liberalism of hero-worshipping non-Whites results in catastrophic denigration of Whites as a whole, and none of this has anything to do with what Adolf Hitler is supposed to have done at all. Instead, it has much more to do with the laziness of Whites to uncover facts for themselves, and that has everything to do with lack of will in the first place.

As for wishing Hitler had never been born, I will make just a few comments and advise anyone stupidly agreeing with such crass absurdity to take some time in educating themselves with some simple facts beforehand; and the best way you can do that is by reading the books listed in the [forthcoming] NS Press UK catalogue.¹

Quite simply, had Hitler not been born, Europe — including Britain — would have fallen to communism as easily as Europe fell to Germany at the outset of The Second European Brother's War. I have covered this in a previous article for this magazine [number 4, 20th April 2017] but Europe, if not the whole world, owes a huge debt of gratitude to Adolf Hitler.

The back-seat drivers who proliferate the nationalist movement spend too much time denigrating the Great One, when they should be promoting Aryan man's saviour instead. If they do not play their part in helping reveal the Truth to an apathetic White population at the same time, this magazine will have no choice but continue to state; "The biggest enemy of the White man is the White man himself". How sadly true that is.

The calculated design to instil White guilt and self-loathing began two-hundred years ago with the legend of Black slavery, and dreadful tales of a "Jewish Holocaust™" used for the same reason ever since. And that's why both myths continue to receive a particularly unique type of sponsorship from the controlled media today.

For example, if we examine slavery first, and I may be wrong, but I believe more White people have been enslaved than have the number of Blacks at any time throughout the course of history.

When the Vikings raided the coastal settlements of Wales and Ireland more than ten-centuries ago, they plundered every village in their path and snatched whomever they wanted in the process. The Roman Empire was doing much the same centuries beforehand, and so were the Muslims perhaps even longer; although you won't hear much about that in the controlled media for obvious reasons.

Beside the tales of 'traditional' slaves learned on the first day of nursery school, Michael A. Hoffman II offers a truer version of slavery detailed in his book "They were White and they were Slaves" [Wiswell Ruffin House]. The accounts of White children — most under ten-years old — forced to climb inside chimneys to sweep them clean are horrifying; and so are the tales of thousands of other children forced into underground mines or a day of hard labour in the quarries long after enactment of laws abolishing Black Slavery had passed. In fact, Whites worked, and died, in far worse conditions during this period than any Black slave on a plantation ever had to endure, a matter constantly raised in the Houses of Parliament throughout the Victorian era.

Besides, slavery existed in Africa long before Whites even set foot on the continent, and certainly continues to this day in one form or another. In fact, one Black chieftain travelled to Paris soon after abolition to plead for its reintroduction as his tribe's existence depended on capturing members of other Black tribes and then selling them to the 'evil Europeans' to be used as slaves!

Slavery, however despicable it may be, is therefore not a White problem (nor even invention); it has only become one because most Whites are simply unable to think for themselves and see past the media's brainwashing.

As for the "Holocaust", if Hitler had never been born the establishment would simply invent some other crime to instil White guilt, for that is what the "Holocaust" is, largely an invention. I am not suggesting that no atrocities were committed in the camps, or elsewhere, by some Germans. There certainly were, and resulted in many deaths — although nowhere near as many deaths that Stalin, Pol Pot, Mao and other communist leaders were responsible for. The controlled media don't ram their very real crimes down the public's throat at every opportunity — and to claim that six million perished in gas chambers is pure fantasy.

Innocents were, of course, murdered by both sides during the war; ruthlessly, and without remorse. The fire-bombing of Hamburg and Dresden by the British and Americans is just one example, which resulted in a very real holocaust where hundreds of thousands of innocent civilians met with the most awful of deaths.

Fundamentally, the problem lies with the fact most Whites are either unable or unwilling to think for themselves. Explore and counteract that problem and we will be somewhere nearer to finding a solution as to why the majority of Whites are seemingly not interested in preserving their race and are therefore uninterested in nationalist politics to begin with.

Grubbiness, Sickness, and Madness

Fruit Goes Nuts

One inevitable consequence of our polyglot society — although far from being the most detrimental — is that so-called ‘minorities’ have found it advantageous to become hypersensitive to any real or imagined slight or threat. And Mark D’arcy Smith is no exception

WITH A FACE LIKE THAT, surely a sense of humour is obligatory?

In fact, he might well top the list. He should do, if there is any truth in the tale of his visit to a pub in Bromley anyway. Now, Wetherspoon's is not to everyone's taste, but it's easy to see the appeal; the food is passable and drink is cheap for instance. Having said that, most venues can hardly be called cheerful with it and Nancy-boy Mark certainly wasn't happy with the Richmal Crompton last month.

Still, it made us laugh. Spoons' founder, Tim Martin, is an innovative sort of fella who developed an ‘app’ for smart phone users to place an order by text and have food delivered to their table without navigating the scrum at the bar.

The system seems to be very efficient as well; because little Mark and his pal received their platter in double-quick time. Good news, you would have thought: well, not so for the over-sensitive pansy who didn't see it that way.

You see, the only problem was that one particular wag had already placed an order for that table....and sent over a banana.

Who says Bromley has lost its sense of humour?

Well, obviously Mark and his pal have for starters. Instead of acknowledging what ought to be seen as remarkably quick witticism, the two “looked at each other, then the banana [until] it clicked that it wasn't our order and was clearly sent by someone trying to be racist.”

If a plate of chicken wings had been delivered instead, there's all likelihood the dish would have been devoured before complaint was made, but Mark was too anxious by then. His bottle had returned the next day however, enough to report the “appalling” incident to the police who immediately began to investigate “a racially aggravated public order offence”.

Of course they bloody did.

No arrests have been made yet, and that makes Mark nervous. In fact, the “memory of that horrible incident” still spooks the sensitive boy, so much that even “walking through the place I considered home makes my hands shake and my palms sweat.”

If so, it's probably well that he and his friends are now boycotting the chain. It's curry night every Thursday after all.

Mummy's Little Soldier

When Sgt Randy Date got a scathing review from the top brass last month he thought it was a bit unfair. Actually, you can't really blame him getting a little pissed off either.

For one thing, it wasn't even he who attended Colchester's training course in the first place; it was another Sergeant instead, Masoud Mashid, and that got Randy's back up.

What particularly upset mummy's little soldier was the apparent proof of his regiment's latent “racism;” and their inherent view that one Black looks just like every other Black.

Quite how this veteran survived tours of Kosovo, Iraq and Afghanistan before this is anyone's guess. Or it should be, anyway. It should be especially considering that his first move after receiving the damning report was to sue the Ministry of Defence.

Sgt Cup-cake won his case of course, and the MOD was found guilty of racial discrimination. Not-so Sgt Rock will receive his compensation just in time for Xmas after the court decides how much on December 12th.

Not the Brightest Move

In a sane world, the London Borough of Croydon would have been wiped from existence a long time ago. Having said that, its current populous is doing a pretty good job to cleanse itself — by wiping each other out. It is not job done yet of course, so the whole rotten borough gets shoddier by the day and more dangerous by the minute.

And Thornton Heath is one of the worst. No wonder Pauline and Morris Smith decided to get the hell out of Dodge a bit lively. And who can blame them for wanting “a better life and education” for their daughter “away from the danger of knives in London” anyway?

“GOT A FUNNY FEELING ABOUT THIS MUM”

Obviously, little Stef jumped at the chance for a new start somewhere else; especially after her parents told her how idyllic their own upbringing had been. “Wonderful!” thought the Grade-A student. “Brilliant!” the gospel chorister thought. “I'll be safe in a place where there is no knife crime!” Oh dear.

Whether the Smith's romanticism was borne of nostalgia, or if it was just their minds playing tricks in middle age is arguable:

but the choice of where to relocate was more than mere folly. In fact, the decision to return to May Pen in the parish of Clarendon, Jamaica, was outright lunacy and deserves whatever award "Nutter of the Year" gets these days.

Rather than being the safe haven mum and dad had grown homesick for, never mind the place Stefika had come to believe was Zion incarnate by this time, Clarendon actually has one of the highest homicide rates on the planet. In fact, well over one hundred were recorded in the first six months of last year alone — and most of those killed were children or teenagers.

Do we need to finish this column? Of course young Stefika met a sticky end. Two days after going missing her naked cadaver was discovered dumped at the roadside, clearly brutalised and with fatal stab wounds to the neck. Somewhat curiously, Mrs Smith asked herself later if she "really had made the right decision to come here."

Who'd have thunk it?

There Endeth the Lesson

November's Numb Nut-of-the-Month award goes to the Youth Offending Service in Uxbridge, West London — in particular, to one bright spark for his magnificently odd attitude of how best to combat knife-crime.

Actually, what happened there could really have done so anywhere else in London: but this happened in the constituency of PM Bojo no less, and young thugs caught possessing a knife in Uxbridge do not go to prison but offered all incentive to become a nice boy instead.

In fact, the worst these people expect is a bit of a telling-off, before a tepid warning from the judge not to do it again. If caught a second time — as most usually are — a court referral order may be imposed, but nothing much else. And, true to form, it wasn't long before Hakim Sillah appeared before the beak again.

It didn't particularly bother him of course; because experience had told Sillah a referral order to attend "a knife awareness course" at Hillingdon Civic Centre would only take a few hours from his life each week. That's what he thought anyway.

Proving quite categorically that the cranky apologists who run these worthless schemes have no idea of the nature of the beast they are dealing with, however, frequently tends to an over-extended confidence. And that really didn't work out well for Hakim last month.

Hillingdon's not-so bright spark who thought having "a group session" with others just like Hakim is still wondering what went wrong. What could possibly go wrong with having all the sinners together under one roof to discuss how best to deter knife-crime, after all? Well he soon found out what should have been bloody obvious. And so did Hakim....even more bloodily.

In fact, just after mum had dropped him off and before reverse gear could be engaged, her boy was already dead — hacked to death with the zombie-knife another attendee always carries.

Det. Chief Inspector Noel Hugh said that both victim and suspect were known young offenders, and he also believed that no one was searched prior to entry. No shit, Sherlock!

Council workers, more realistically knew this was eventually bound to happen — although their pleas for the installation of knife detecting arches were ignored — following "hundreds of previous incidents."

Fancy that.

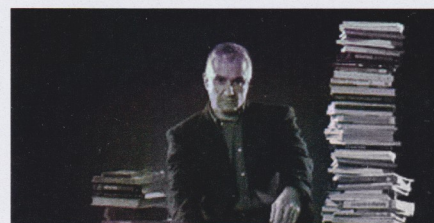

Mischief Makes Sense

Peter Boghossian is a well-respected and established lecturer at Oregon University. Well, he was until recently anyway.

Even the Guardista at O.U. treasured Professor Boghossian and regularly published his writings in their glossy journals. The first to feature was "Our Struggle Is My Struggle: Solidarity Feminism As An Intersectional Reply To Neoliberal And Choice Feminism." That's some title, even if no one has any idea what it means, but it's just the sort of clever-clog mealy-mouthed verbiage they're looking for.

Proving they are not as bright as they may like to think, it took months before even a single egghead realised the mischievous professor's paper was actually Chapter 12 of Mein Kampf in entirety, practically verbatim.

His next contribution was entitled: "Human Reactions To Rape Culture And Queer Performativity [sic] At Urban Dog Parks In Portland"; and they published that too, much to their later embarrassment.

LOKI BOGHOSSIAN searches for The Turner Diaries towards curing a sick faculty.

Obviously it wasn't long before the faculty Red Guard got shot of the mischief maker. The professor was not dismissed for plagiarism however, and certainly not because of excuse that the academic papers he had written were spoof.

What had really done for the professor, in fact, was his single-handed exposure of every rotten university administrator, by revealing exactly the type of 'non-think' they are infesting within academies today. Loki Boghossian was guilty of the greatest "crime" against social sciences possible; simply by touching the bent out of shape crooks with a little bit of mischief-making.

Well done, Professor.

Our Truth in the Face of Their Lies

The multicultural society imposed on Britain is one that every government minister and renegade MP, with collaboration from every other assorted body of authority - from the police to the lawyer-bureaucrat politicians - is one built upon sand. That is why they will do anything to protect their flimsy creation, and that is why they share every tactic necessary to defend it. The first thing they do is deny any problems exist, then they try to ignore it, they cover-up as best they can, before it's time to shift the blame. It is a desperate strategy to protect multiculturalism, and glaringly illustrated by the authorities' reprehensible response to the scandal of Asian 'grooming gangs' throughout the last two decades. The evil reality of these gangs was so dreadful in 2004 already that some sections of the controlled media had to reveal at least a little bit of what was going on; as much as they really didn't want to, but only because they could hide it no longer.

In fact, the situation had become some dire in the West Yorkshire town of Keighley by then, that even Channel 4 had a programme ready to broadcast in May that year which is extraordinary given their usual low-standards. The teenage girls who were victims had their stories recorded for posterity, and interviews with those left to pick up the remnants of a young girls' shattered life revealed their own despair. Social workers, who only cared about safeguarding their monthly paycheque, tried their best not to reveal too much of course, but interviews with the ordinary folk of Keighley demonstrated otherwise: they knew it was going on, and they knew the only way to put an end to it.

Of course, all of the victims were young, White, British girls as usual they said, because all of the rapists and abusers were adult, violent Asian predators as expected. Actually, the situation had gotten so bad that even the local Labour MP voiced her concerns for once. She said this was a very real problem needed to deal with, because it is inevitably just the tip of a huge and monstrous national scandal as well. After weeks of denying that such a problem existed in Keighley, let alone anywhere else, prime-time reports of similar events in nearby Bradford quickly proved the police to be liars not long after. Consequently, the Chief Constable of West Yorkshire Police demanded Channel 4 pulled the programme, or at least postpone it until after the municipal elections pending that same month. He did that because his bosses told him to, and because he needed a little more time to shift the blame elsewhere.

Instead of doing his job properly by protecting young White girls in the first place, and rather than hunting down the savages responsible for their misery afterwards, all he wanted to do was please his bosses more than anything else. So when they told him to say: "The broadcast will increase public tension across Bradford with the consequent risk that it will provoke public disorder" he didn't bat an eye-lid, because he understood every intention was to deflect public opinion on to something, anything, else instead.

Of course, the authorities' main priority at the time was to avoid providing the BNP with any electoral advantage, so it is no surprise that all of their collaborators immediately came running to help them do this. That's why the step-and-fetch-it's at Channel 4 really could see no problem with delaying their broadcast either if doing so helped initialise a new strategic pattern from the State to stifle dissent. They had long understood that by doing all asked of them would give every other collaborator in the controlled media time to distract and divert public attention away from the consequences that a tidal wave of non-White immigration has caused. And that's all they are bothered about.

That is why they continue with their deception by distracting away from the root cause of every subsequent grooming disgrace and atrocity since then as well. That's why they will do anything, literally anything, to ignore, deny, and cover-up what happened to thousands of other young White girls in Rochdale, Oldham, Rotherham, Peterborough, Telford, Bradford, Newcastle, Huddersfield, because each and every single time followed the same tragic pattern. They don't want to tell you that police officers have lied again, because they are equally complicit in these crimes as are the social workers who defend the liars. They are more afraid of daring to tell the truth that it is always Pakistani or other men of Asian descent behind the grooming and raping of underage White girls because that would brand them with the mark of a "racist", and they've spent decades telling everyone else that is the worst crime ever.

It's not only the grooming gang cases the controlled media try to keep hidden either. They deliberately 'fail' to report on crimes that might reflect negatively on non-White communities, and they deliberately avoid letting slip the racial aspects of crimes committed by non-Whites if the victim is White especially. Everyone already knows the massive upsurge of knife crime and fatal stabbings in London is ordinarily Black on Black, and there's not much they can do to hide that fact no matter how hard they try to avoid referring to the ethnicity of either aggressor or victim.

They do this because they know their social engineering of multiculturalism has failed them, and is manifestation of the inevitable failure in every intention to enforce a false and fragile multi-racial society upon us. And, still the mainstream politicians and their fellow travellers refuse to face-up to the evidence before their eyes; all they continue to do is deny, ignore, cover-up, and shift the blame.

It is our duty as British National Socialists to expose their lies, their failures, and to present the cold, hard truth to Our People, Our Folk - the White British national people. Whenever the system seeks to hide the truth, we must get the word out into the public domain, and we must shine a bright light on every aspect of the darkness the Establishment seeks to conceal. Once armed with the truth Our Folk can see who the genuine guardians of Our People really are, and they can then make a choice as with whom they will stand alongside in the fight to take our country back.

For us, failure is not an option. The future of Our Folk depends on our success.
We Will Have Our Country Back!

We Must Secure the Existence of Our People and a Future for White Children
